It is very well known that all the art criticisms that appear in our newspapers are written by the oldest, most experienced, most widely cultivated of the entire differial corps, whose practical knowledge of paintings and the style of the celebrated masters is beyond question, and whose utterances are oracular.

Across the Atlantic, indeed, it is far different; "the most inexperienced youths of the literary guild begin with the criticism of pictorics, which is considered to require so made a stock of information and so bittle judgment that any two boy may undertake the pick is the secretion of France G. Hormarco, in his book entitled "Thoughts About Art," Just published by Romarre Secretary and secreted by us from F. A. Chumr de Co. In the continue of the sales of writer of no mean ability; and what he may about art is well worth heeding. We do not commend its perusal to any of our art critics; for, as we have said, they Nothing more strikingly evinces the cold and deliberate intenders of the Radi-cal party to continue their violent and revolutionary usurpations than the efforts which are daily made to good the South-ers people to sets of outrage and violence. If there be any proposition in politics that can be regarded as universally true, it is that dissensions and lawlessness in the State are the fruit of crueity and misrule. If has ever been the trick of despots to inflame the rands of their subjects with a consciousness of oppression and wrong, spur them on to the commission of des-perate deeds, and then make sitoss inevitdo not commend its perusal to any of our art critics; for, as we have said, they are out of the reach of instruction; but to others, who desire sound information and practical instruction in the fundamental principles of art and art culture, we recommend this book. Written, as it is, by an artist, it is a book that artists expecults will endow and covered to the c ists especially will enjoy; and to every art student it is almost indispensable. There spur them on to the commission of des-perate deeds, and then make those inevit-able acts pretexts for tighteating the screw and fixing the tetter. There are few minds so deprayed as not to seek an excuse for infamy. Cruelty is usually the effect of earnest and gloomy hatred, and is gen-erally indulged with an austere brow and a whining tone. History furnishes but a few examples (among the most prominent is a capital chapter upon the relation be-tween painting and photography, wherein the true value of the photograph is justly

He says: "Photography and painting are forever independent of each other, and there is no manner of rivalry possible between them. Photography fears no labor, and is not tastidious; it has neither feeling lew examples (among the most prominent of which are BARERE and BUTLER) who of which are Barkers and BUTLER) who loved crime for its own sake—who could look upon the suffering and despair of their fellow-creatures with the glee of the flendish spirits that furked about the pool of seething pitch in Malebolge. But these are the scarabes of the animal kingdom, and may hardly be regarded as representatives of our race. Aside from such exnor choice; it is an unconscious slave, dead to all affection. But, if it has no affections it has no repugnances, and will copy the ughest house in England, and give you every foolish ornament, as it it were a gem of sculpture from a treeze of PHIDIAS. gem of sculpture from a treeze of Phirolas. In short, it will do precisely that kind of unintellectual but accurate copyism of miscellaneous objects which a true artist has no business with, and neither betray the impatience of the painter nor the mockery of the caricaturist. Photography represents facts isolated from their natural companions and without any hint of their amples, there are few instances on record where men have wastonly oppressed their fellows without seeking some apology for their crime. Even Herop had a reason their crime. Even Humon had a reason for murdering infants; and upon the same principle the Radical party seek a pretext for opprecring the South. They savor certain classes and crush others, and then, affect surprise that the victims of their tyranny are not as peaceable, quiet and loyal as their more fortunate neighbors. They array one-half of a community scantar another and complain of divisions. lation to the human mind. The phoographer is rather the slave of the camera than its master; and, though great skill and science are needed to serve the camera well, the soul of the operator has nothing to do with the result. What the artist sees and array one-half of a community against another, and complain of divisions; they legislate for one section as if it were the entire country, and affect much patriotic horror at hearing groanings, wailings and enashing directly. is a vision of Nature through the lenses that she has given the human eyes, brightened or dimmed as may be with human or sorrows. The vision thus transm ings and gnashing of teeth. They have no doubt but that by striking the shackles from the limbs of the South she would soon is reflected in the mysterious, dark cham-ber of the skull, with a thousand subtle changes and strange variations of unac-countable fantasy. Men's eyes were not suppress disorder among her citizens, and peace and loyalty would soon be fully re-stored. But this is not what they want. Passion engendered by many years of angry strife made the Radical party popu-lar and powerful in the North, and they given them to be superseded by carefullyround glace longer of the heat London manufacture.
